

"PUL MOTOR IMPERILS LIVES," SAYS PULLMAN

Charges Life-Saving Offer War Rejected by Potomac Boatmen.

Following the announcement that members of the boat club of Washington would consider resolutions to be presented to the District Commissioners for a more complete patrol of the Upper Potomac, Maj. Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of police, in an interview yesterday, advocated a high power launch for duty in that territory but stamped as unnecessary many of the appliances which are sought by river enthusiasts.

While not opposed to the idea of the pulmotor, Maj. Pullman said that it had been demonstrated that such an appliance had done more to retard the life saving record than any invention in recent years. He said that he was backed up by this device, the highest official of the Red Cross.

One of the salient points made by Maj. Pullman in his rejection of the pulmotor in general use, was the fact that on many occasions when a life is at stake it could be saved by the hand method of resuscitation, those in a position to recall life await the arrival of such an apparatus.

Pullman said that on many occasions it required from fifteen minutes to one hour to get the appliance in working order.

In speaking of the Shafter method of resuscitation, Maj. Pullman said that the police department of Washington had done more by way of instruction in this direction than any other similar department in the United States.

Many members of the police force are familiar with this method of resuscitation, according to Maj. Pullman, and all are being instructed. Officer F. J. Brunner, who has been in charge of the river lookout, he said, was proficient in this method of bringing drowning persons to life. He said that he had been offered by an instructor had been offered to the volunteer life saving stations established at the several boat houses, but had been declined. Officers of the clubs, he said, preferred to wait until after the annual boating events.

It is the intention of Maj. Pullman to bend every effort to reduce the danger on the river. He realizes, he said, that the present boat in commission by the police is not adequate to handle the situation and he will use every endeavor to replace it with one which will meet the requirements, when funds are available.

DROPS MUSHY PEAR ON POLICE CAPTAIN'S HEAD

Special to The Washington Herald.
New York, Aug. 29.—Capt. Patrick A. Cray, of the East Eighty-eighth Street Police Station, was sitting in a south-bound Second avenue car early this morning on his way to his home. He was leaning back in his seat with his hat on his lap, resting.

John Collins, a driver was on his way to work. He bought a bag of pears and ate one or two, but there was one he did not relish, it being too soft for him. At the northwest corner of Twenty-sixth street and Second avenue he cast the soft pear from him just as the car on which Capt. Cray was riding came along.

The pear struck Capt. Cray on the head. Then Collins boarded the car. Cray met him half way and blew a police whistle. Patrolman Shelmeyer, of the East Twenty-second Street Station, arrested Collins, who was locked up on a charge of assault.

BRIDE AIDS DETECTIVES.

Gives Them Jewelry Husband is Charged with Stealing.

Philadelphia, Aug. 28.—Through the disclosure of a young woman who says she married on August 6 a man now awaiting trial on a charge of attempted burglary, City Hall detectives have discovered the perpetrator of more than a dozen robberies and recovered between $5,000 and $7,000 of plunder.

The man waiting trial, Frank Mulligan, alias Baker, admitted, the police say, that his bride's story was true. The bride brought to City Hall a suitcase filled with jewelry, and two other suitcases, also filled with jewelry, were recovered by the detectives at the address Mrs. Mulligan gave.

FRENCH GIRLS ADORE AVIATORS

London, Aug. 29.—The French air pilots are today in danger of becoming the speed darlings of Paris. A handsome young pilot named Xingesser, as he was called, was seen by the motor car, stepped from a cafe to the motor car, was surrounded by a crowd of midwives who pressed round him requesting his signature on postcards. Verdines was seen near the "Place de l'Opera," and a young woman came forward and prevented him with a bouquet while hands were thrust out to him on every side.

Notes of Camp Ordway

By WATSON DAVIS.

A pleasant occupation that the officers and men of the 1st Infantry have during the summer is attempting to keep the different drill manuals and regulations up to date.

Every week or so the War Department issues a number of amendments and changes to paragraphs in the army manual. These are printed in sheets, and the industrious soldier sits down and spends the afternoon cutting and pasting the changes in their proper places.

Sergt. Maj. J. D. Hood has been keeping the Army Regulations and the Infantry Drill Regulations up to date, and he has to make changes every few days. In some cases the changes are changed, and then changed again. The result is a volume of little slips and crossed out paragraphs.

The men who were left behind in the Machine Gun Company when their comrades went on the hike have a tale of woe to tell. The company got moving orders at noon and marched out at 3 o'clock with two days' rations. According to Clerk Palmer Sowers, who has been made temporary second camp cook because of a broken leg, this is a story of the provisions left behind for eight men for three days: One barrel of flour, two cakes of soap, one-half can of lard, nine cords of wood, eight grains of sugar.

Mess Sergt. Claude Kennedy is supreme cook. Corp. Samuel Melick is head waiter, and "Top" Sergt. Robert L. Haney is in command. Some men talk of deserting to other kitchens.

Now that the moving picture machine is out of commission, Maj. John W. Baker, of the Quartermaster's Corps, plans to use the electrical generating plant for the lighting of the camp. It is figured that the little one-cylinder gasoline engine will do the trick.

Heretofore mess kits and other articles could be identified only by private marks, but now each man has a number and each article of his equipment bears that number. There is no chance of a mix-up.

Mess Sergt. R. A. Burke, of Company E, was very much disappointed when he heard that one of his men was going to be taken to a battalion on the hike yesterday. He had read in some army book, probably obsolete, that the mess sergeant rode on the company escort wagon. At any rate, he hiked with the rest of the men.

Another sport has been discovered at Ordway. Company M has a eucher team. Privates E. J. Taylor and H. A. Westcott have defeated all card sharks of the company, and are looking for more contestants. Sergt. John Taylor and Corp. Leo Osborne are the second Company M team. Company M training quarters has a special deck of cards with extremely large figures that the men can play in the dark after taps.

The hikers are Jack Lincoln Redden, Milton Davis, Marvin H. Hall, Howard Kratz, Frank M. Clark, Henry Roemer, Jr., Charles A. Fink and Allen S. Kittrell—all around 20 years old. They will live on a strict diet all this week, deprecating the walk in less than eight and one-half hours, and will try to make it eight hours flat, an average of five miles an hour.

Laurel will hardly be more than awake when the hikers pass through at about 6 o'clock.

At 10 o'clock along the road the hikers will be checked. Their time will be taken and the report signed.

Arriving at the finish, Fifteenth and H streets, the hikers will be rushed to baths and will spend the rest of the day with friends here.

SCHOOLGIRLS OF 15 "SLAVES" FOR MEN

Taken From Classrooms to Walk Streets for Masters.

Special to The Washington Herald.
New York, Aug. 29.—As a result of the unexpected discovery last night by men working for the district attorney's office of a band of white slavers plying their trade in the neighborhood of Grand and Forsyth streets, the grand jury today indicted four more men. Their arrest is expected momentarily.

The detectives found that these men preyed almost exclusively on schoolgirls, who were taken from their class rooms and placed on the streets to earn money for their masters. Two girls, 15 years old, who are still registered in a grade in public schools, were before District Attorney Swann this morning.

Women of the streets continue to come to the district attorney's office anxious to lay bare their lives that the men responsible may be punished. Tessie Diamond, 18 years old, told her story today. The girl said she had been employed in a milliner's shop when she met a man who professed to be a friend of her mother. Telling her he would get a divorce, he persuaded Tessie to do likewise. On the pretext of marriage he persuaded the girl to live with him and finally urged her to go on the streets, telling her that in that manner sufficient money was made in that manner the marriage would take place.

The girl worked a year for the man and turned over all her earnings. When she suggested that the marriage take place the man disappeared with all her savings. Later she found he had never been married. She has made a charge of grand larceny as well as white slavery against the man.

Borrowing mothers are also among the throng which visit the Criminal Courts Building these days. A Mrs. Royland, who gave her address as Thatford street, Brooklyn, came to tell of the ruin of her 17-year-old daughter, Bertha, a short time ago.

The mother attributed her girl's shame to a married man who lived in the same house with the Royland family. The man had seduced her daughter, she said, and Mrs. Royland said, and she begged the district attorney to find her daughter for her.
